As all reviewers point out, the manuscript about moisture recycling in Europe by Bisselink & Dolman represents a valuable contribution to this growing field of research. The reviewers raise number of important methodological as well as technical points that should be carefully addressed by the authors in their revised version of the manuscript. Several definitions and names of variables should be reviewed and some results better supported. I encourage the authors to reply to all reviewers' comments and to submit a revised version for publication in HESS.
